WAL-MART'S BAD NEWS

1 Wal-Mart said earnings per share would decline as much as 12 percent next fiscal year due to investment in technology, higher wages and lower prices, sending its shares down more than 8 percent. Wal-Mart also announced a $20 billion share buyback, but the drop in its share price wiped out close to the same amount in market value. REUTERS

FLORIDA PLANE CRASH

2 A small plane crashed into a South Florida mobile home park, killing the pilot and another person on the ground, the National Transportation Safety Board said Wednesday. The crash was reported to Palm Beach County Fire Rescue on Tuesday night after witnesses saw the aircraft drop out of the sky. Surveillance video showed the plane banking and zooming down from the sky before it crashed, sending a column of black smoke into the air. REUTERS

SHOPIFY AND UBER

3 Canadian e-commerce platform Shopify Inc. said it was partnering with taxi-hailing service Uber to help merchants deliver goods to customers on the same day in New York City, Chicago and San Francisco. Shopify said the UberRUSH delivery service will be available to its merchants in the three cities immediately. REUTERS

No cause of death in case of New Jersey toddler
An autopsy on the 3-year-old boy who was found dead in Haddon Township, New Jersey, hours after he went missing Tuesday did not reveal the cause of death, reports said.

Brendan Link Creato was reported missing by his parents at 6 a.m. A K-9 unit found the boy in a wooded area across town three hours later.

Brendan's parents called 911 to say that the boy had disappeared from the home.

"The door was locked. I guess he unlocked it and left," Brendan's father told a 911 operator, reports said.

As of press-time, authorities had made no comment as to whether foul play may have been a factor in the boy's death. No information was available about whether further tests beyond an autopsy would be taken. METRO

Dauphin County man sentenced for pimping
A so-called "suburban brothel" operator was sentenced to 10 years in prison Wednesday for child sex trafficking.

Coy Klinger, 38, operated a brothel in his home in Lower Paxton Township, and one of the prostitutes was 17 years old, federal prosecutors said.

Klinger pleaded guilty in February.

At his sentencing, he blamed his "stupidity" for his crimes.

"All I can do is plead stupidity," Klinger said, according to PennLive.com, before the sentence was handed down.

Klinger recruited women using Facebook and other social media services, then advertised his brothel online with graphic nude photographs of the women who worked in his home.

Customers had sex with the prostitutes inside Klinger's home. METRO

Pittsburgh 'Dance Mom' indicted for fraud
Reality TV show star Abby Lee Miller has been indicted on bankruptcy fraud and other federal charges for concealing income she earned on "Dance Moms" and related spinoff shows, prosecutors said on Wednesday.

A federal grand jury returned a 20-count indictment on Tuesday against Miller, 50, on charges of bankruptcy fraud, concealment of bankruptcy assets, and false bankruptcydeclarations.

If convicted, Miller faces up to five years in prison and a $250,000 fine for each count, Hickton said in a press release.

Miller had filed a petition to reorganize her dance studio, Abby Lee Dance Company in the Penn Hills, Pa., in December 2010. She is accused of scheming to defraud the bankruptcy court by concealing income she earned between 2012 and 2013, by creating bank accounts to hide it.

"Dance Moms" on the Lifetime television network, currently in its fifth season, exposes the lives of competitive young dancers, including the tensions between their parents and Miller. She is currently filming a sixth season, said her lawyer, Robert Ridge of Pittsburgh.

Abby Lee Miller PROVIDED

Some of the fraudulent activity came to light after a bankruptcy judge, channel surfing one night, spotted some of the related shows and raised questions about Miller's claim to be cash-strapped, the indictment said.

Investigators also found emails from Miller to her accountant and a joint venture partner in 2013 with the subject line "LETS MAKE MONEY AND KEEP ME OUT OF JAIL," admonishing them to "not raise any red flags" and "DON'T PUT CASH IN THE BANK!!!," according to the indictment.

Miller's lawyer said his client entered bankruptcy to save her business and "has paid all of her creditors 100 cents on the dollar. There is no loss to any of her creditors." Reuters

Sweetgreen set up their location, with seats for 36 inside the former Chestnut Dollar Store at 18th and Chestnut streets, with two wide skylights overhead, reclaimed wood chairs and tables and a stripped-down interior design that's part of Sweetgreen's philosophy of "getting back to the basics," they say.

> "With this fourth Philly location, we're excited to build deeper relationships in the community."

> Neman

In an odd touch, old-fashioned wooden school bleachers line one back wall.

"We're excited to open our largest location in Philadelphia," Neman said. "We're looking forward to offering our guests a larger and more centrally located space, and the response from the neighbors has been overwhelmingly positive."

Future touches to come include a photo from a planned shoot at Weaver's Orchard, and a seasonally inspired mural by a local artist.

The menu currently includes hearty autumn specials like an apples, pears and cheddar salad, and curry cauliflower and quinoa.

Metro got a chance to sample the quinoa, and it's as fresh as you'd imagine a meal sourced from local farms to be. The organic ingredients give you the sense of having not just a home-cooked but a homegrown meal.

"Walking into a Sweetgreen feels special — it's an experience, it's a destination and there's a sense of community. The decor, the music, the fresh food and our amazing team members work together to create a unique experience for each of our guests," Neman said.

Neman said 100 percent of proceeds on opening day will go toward their "Sweetgreen in Schools" program's partnership with Albert Greenfield School, to help the school host free farmstands for kids and the neighborhood.

Eagles die-hard, asked about Chip Kelly and Sam Bradford, offers only "we'll see" and "you never know."

NED EHRBAR
AND EVAN MACY
@MetroPhilly

Bradley Cooper and Philadelphia have a thing together. It's hard to deny.

The 2011 People's Sexiest Man Alive was born and raised in the area, grew up in Jenkintown and filmed his Oscar-nominated Eagles-themed movie, "Silver Linings Playbook," in the city.

But Cooper, whose support for the Eagles ranges from outspoken to vociferous, wavered a bit when it came to two of the most prominent assets of the club.

In an exclusive interview with Metro, the hearthrob hedged his bets when it came to coach Chip Kelly and quarterback Sam Bradford, offering a lukewarm show of support for the embattled duo.

"You know, we'll see," Cooper told Metro. "They had a good last weekend [a 39-17 win against the Saints], but you never know until the end of the season."

The 40-year-old graduate of Germantown Academy is solid on one thing when it comes to the Eagles: Never count your chickens.

"Well, I was happy with last week, and then we have the Giants on Monday night, so fingers crossed," Cooper told Metro. "We're 2-3, and you know, I always try to stay positive."

And surprising.

While he proudly wore the green and white in "Silver Linings," the actor was able to spare a bit football love for the longtime rival Giants, who find themselves atop the division.

"I wouldn't say I'm not the biggest fan of the Giants," Cooper told Metro.

"I actually like Eli Manning a lot, and I was a huge Michael Strahan fan. They were an incredible team, but I'm from Philly. What do you want me to do?"

That's a big shift from last season when Cooper mocked Big Blue ahead of the Eagles' 27-0 drubbing of the Giants, saying in a promotional video that aired before the matchup: "This is more than a mid-season matchup, this is a street fight — Wall Street against Broad Street …"

Last season, the Birds were 9-3 and looking poised to make a deep playoff run. But then, of course, the Seahawks, Cowboys and Redskins dismantled Chip Kelly's team, as the Eagles finished 1-3 and missed the playoffs in heartbreaking fashion.

A year ago the Giants and Eagles had a weird slate of games together. In the aforementioned four-touchdown drubbing last October, the Eagles played arguably their best game of the year. In a season-ending victory (a meaningless one at that, costing the Eagles draft positioning), the Birds were able to win, but not thanks to a depleted secondary.

"I think we had our best defensive game and worst defensive game against the Giants in the two different games," Eagles defensive coordinator Billy Davis told the media Wednesday. "The last game they threw it over 50 times and over 400 yards of passing. If you can limit the number of times Eli, if he throws it is that many times — he's going to put eight to 10 of them vertically on you, you have to make the plays that he goes vertical with."

The Eagles have a new-look group of cornerbacks and safeties to combat the Giants bevy of vertical weapons, guys like Odell Beckham Jr. and Rueben Randle, with only safety Malcolm Jenkins returning from last season. But the ball hawks on Philly's secondary might not be able to induce turnovers as easily as they have been thus far in their 2-3 campaign.

> "We're 2-3, and you know, I always try to stay positive."
> Cooper

"You know where [Manning] is ranked in the NFL in getting the ball out of his hands? Third," Davis said. "So once again, it's a high-efficiency, quick ball-out-of-the-quarterback's-hand offense. And again, they have only had, I think, four sacks maybe and two interceptions, so Eli not only makes a quick read and gets it out of his hands, if there is any pressure, he throws it away."

Whether the Eagles are able to rush the passer the way they'd like, or get to the ball after it leaves Manning's hands is yet to be seen. But in order for this Giants squad to resemble the one Cooper remembers so fondly from their 2011 Super Bowl run, they'll have to beat the Eagles. Something they didn't do last year.

Philly has won seven of the last 10 match-ups between the two rivals, dating back to 2010. The all-time series edge lies in the Giants' favor, 85–79–2.

Building collapse contractor takes stand

Griffin Campbell tells his side of the story for first time.

DAN KELLEY
@MetroPhilly
dan.kelley@metro.us

The contractor on trial in a deadly building collapse that killed six people on Market Street said Wednesday that he was given a contract to demolish several buildings despite having very little experience in the field and having never formally bid on a job before.

Griffin Campbell took the stand in his own defense at a trial in which he is accused by prosecutors of doing work so shoddy that it amounted to murder.

The victims died after a three-story wall that was looming over a one-story Salvation Army thrift store — which Campbell received several warnings about — toppled over. Thirteen people were also injured in the accident.

Griffin Campbell, general contractor at the site of the Salvation Army collapse PROVIDED/CHARLES MOSTOLLER

But Campbell's lawyer, Bill Hobson, has argued that Campbell was a small fry who was too inexperienced and too unsophisticated to have criminal responsibility.

"He [Marinakos] said he'd help me through this job."

Campbell

Campbell, 51, said he was handed the job by architect and key prosecution witness Plato Marinakos, whom he considered a friend. He said Marinakos helped him fill out city paperwork, get a general contractor's license with the city and even negotiated adequate insurance for the job on the contractor's behalf.

During about two hours on the stand Wednesday, Hobson pursued a line of questioning designed to underscore his argument that Marinakos supervised Campbell on the job.

Wearing a white collared shirt and speaking in an even-toned voice, Campbell testified that he got his start as a businessman operating a food truck in North Philly. He used money from that to rehab houses around his neighborhood. Along the way, he took odd jobs shoveling snow, mowing lawns and working for concrete companies.

"I never in my life turned a job down," Campbell said. "I want to work."

He met Marinakos as development near Temple University was heating up, and he introduced the architect to rehabbers in North Philly looking to convert row homes into housing for students, Campbell said.

Another friend got him a job tearing down a building near 15th and Erie in 2012. It was his first demo job. Months later, Marinakos approached him about doing tearing down four buildings on Market Street.

Campbell expressed concerns that he had never taken on a project of that size, and had never bid on a project — most of his work came from friends.

Marinakos, Campbell testified, measured the building for him to help develop the $112,000 contract.

"He was going to be there," Campbell said. "His office was around the corner. If I called him he was there," Campbell said.

A co-defendant, Sean Benschop, has pleaded guilty in the case.

Campbell will face cross examination Thursday.

Top cop won't stay for the next mayor

The police chief will exit when Nutter leaves.

DAN KELLEY
@MetroPhilly
dan.kelley@metro.us

Philadelphia Police Commissioner Charles Ramsey announced that he will retire on Jan. 7, as an emotional Mayor Michael Nutter called him "the best police commissioner in the United States of America."

"There are young people alive today who, 10 years ago, may not have been alive in our city but for your work," Nutter said.

Ramsey, a veteran of police departments in Chicago and Washington D.C., has been commissioner through Nutter's entire administration, and his retirement was timed to end with the mayor's term in office.

The 47-year police veteran arrived in Philadelphia after retiring as the top cop in Washington, D.C., at a time when the city had seen 391 murders per year. Nutter called the homicide rate "the number by which we judge ourselves," and said that rate has fallen 33 percent.

It is accurate to say that there are fewer homicides since 2007, but the number has ticked up after years of decline.

Ramsey CHARLES MOSTOLLER

"If he [Deputy Commissioner Richard Ross] doesn't run this department, he'll run one somewhere else."

Ramsey, on his potential replacement

But Ramsey also racked up serious credentials as a police reformer within the department. On the occasions that cops he oversaw were arrested, his statements offered little cover. He became President Barack Obama's pick to co-chair a panel recommending police reforms in the wake of police involved shootings in Ferguson, Missouri, and he invited the U.S. Department of Justice to review the department's use of force after an outcry on police involved shootings.

The recommendations made by the DOJ, Ramsey said, may take up to two years to implement, but has tackled about 30 percent of them — despite roadblocks contained within the department's contract with the police union.

Asked to respond to criticism by residents of some neighborhoods who feel that they have not seen a drop in crime and where mistrust of the police runs remains high, Ramsey said those critics are right.

"We haven't done enough in some neighborhoods," Ramsey said. "I'm not here to declare victory."

In retirement, Ramsey said he expects to take some time to focus on being a good husband, but he expects to keep working, and maybe teaching.

"I plan to stay involved in policing," he said. "It's what I do. It's what I've done since I was 18."

Ex-NBA star Lamar Odom reported in critical condition

It was the latest episode in Odom's roller-coaster personal and professional life.

Lamar Odom GETTY IMAGES

Lamar Odom, a former professional basketball player and reality TV star, was reported to be fighting for his life in a Las Vegas hospital on Wednesday after he was found unresponsive at a legal brothel.

The 35-year-old former Los Angeles Lakers standout and ex-husband of Khloe Kardashian suffered a medical emergency on Tuesday at the Love Ranch brothel in Crystal, Nevada, and was taken to the hospital, the Nye County Sheriff's Office said.

Sunrise Hospital & Medical Center, where Odom was taken, declined to comment on Odom's condition, citing patient confidentiality.

But celebrity website TMZ.com cited unidentified sources as saying Odom was in a coma and that some of his organs were failing.

Another outlet, E!, also cited unnamed sources in reporting that Odom suffered brain damage and at least one stroke, and was on a ventilator after taking multiple drugs. The E! cable TV channel airs the reality show "Keeping Up with the Kardashians."

The brothel's owner, Dennis Hof, said that, during his three-day stay, Odom had been taking large amounts of "herbal Viagra," a nonprescription product which can dramatically lower blood pressure and interact with other medications.

Khloe Kardashian, whose whirlwind romance with Odom was captured in "Keeping Up with the Kardashians" and its spin-off, "Khloe and Lamar," was at his bedside, TMZ and Us Weekly reported.

The couple split in 2013 after four years of marriage and their divorce was finalized in July, though she has remained in close contact with him.

Odom publicist Eve Sarkisyan said in a statement that "family and friends are extremely concerned for Lamar" but warned against "false information being circulated unofficially."

Odom's hospitalization followed a downturn in a 14-season career with National Basketball Association teams, including the Lakers from 2004-2011.

On top of the pressures of the life of a top NBA player, Odom, whose mother died when he was 12, had to deal with being a reality TV star after marrying Kardashian.

The 6-foot-10 athlete has long been reported to have had issues with cocaine abuse, although this has never been publicly confirmed. He has admitted only to using marijuana.

During the 2000-2001 season, Odom was suspended for violating the NBA's antidrug policy. In 2013, he pleaded no contest in Los Angeles to a charge of driving under the influence and was ordered to undergo rehabilitation for three months for alcohol abuse. REUTERS

Lil Wayne gets ahead of himself on Lamar Odom's demise

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

When news broke that Lamar Odom was found unconscious in a Nevada brothel, plenty of famous folks started sending best wishes and hopes for a speedy recovery. Except for Lil Wayne. The rapper — who may have just misheard what was going on — jumped straight into mourning the loss of the retired NBA player and former Kardashian-adjacent reality star. Wednesday morning, while Khloe Kardashian and Kobe Bryant were rushing to Odom's bedside, Weezy tweeted, "R.I.P. LO. Damn man. My blessings to ur fam and friends." An embarrassing gaffe, to be sure. Except Wayne isn't really one for embarrassment. He tweeted a follow-up, simply stating, "Woop," but he didn't take the original tweet down. But maybe — and hear me out here — Lil Wayne actually knows something we don't. Maybe he's secretly from the future. It would explain so much! Then again, he did say R.I.P. "Lo." Has anyone checked on Lindsay Lohan lately?

Emilia Clarke, your sexiest woman alive

Dragons or no dragons, Esquire magazine officially dubs Daenerys Targaryen the fairest in the five kingdoms. Or rather, the mag has dubbed "Game of Thrones" star Emilia Clarke the sexiest woman alive. Take that, all other living women! And while the magazine is focusing on her looks, Clarke reveals how she prepped for her audition for "Game of Thrones," despite not really fitting the part that would eventually make her a star. "My agent told the casting director, 'I know that the breakdown for this character is tall and willowy and blonde. I know she's short and round and brown, but I'd like you to see her,'" Clarke explains. "I had two scenes which told me nothing and not very much time in which to read all those books. So I did what every good actor does and Wikipedia'd the living crap out of it."

Donald Trump vs. 'The Big Lebowski'

Thing One: Donald Trump has a propensity for making ridiculous statements. Thing Two: John Goodman spent much of his screen time in "The Big Lebowski" chastising a character named Donny for being an uninformed idiot. Thanks to the Internet gods, those two great tastes have been combined into something even sweeter, as you can now watch Goodman's Walter Sobchak rail against Donny Trump's idiocy in this exquisite, transcendent mashup.

Want to go to a naked Miley Cyrus concert?

Want to see Miley Cyrus — and the Flaming Lips — performing totally naked? First off, that's an oddly specific fantasy. And second, you're in luck! But there's a catch: You have to be naked, too. Along with the rest of the audience. "Oh f—! [Cyrus] is planning a show where her, the band (us) and the audience are all completely naked with milk — well, white stuff that looks like milk — being spewed everywhere," Flaming Lips ringleader Wayne Coyne spilled on Instagram. "It's a video (in the works) for ['Miley and Her Dead Pets'] song 'The Milky Milky Milk.'" This sounds … less than sanitary. And like a legal nightmare.

Heidi Klum is a self-professed Mr. Mom

Heidi Klum is opening up about life as a single mom some four years after her divorce from Seal, and you know what? Things aren't really that different. "Obviously things have changed, but they haven't changed drastically," she tells Redbook. "He was never your typical dad who left for work in the morning with his briefcase and would be home by dinner time every night. He traveled a lot. The kids knew it was part of his job. I'm a mom and a dad at the same time."

Amy Ryan will do anything for Spielberg

The Oscar nominee talks "Bridge of Spies" — and her bit part in "War of the Worlds."

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

In Steven Spielberg's "Bridge of Spies," in theaters Friday, Amy Ryan plays the worried wife of Tom Hanks' James B. Donovan, a lawyer defending a hated Soviet spy (Mark Rylance). IAAP BUITENDIJK

Amy Ryan is a serious and brilliant actress, but the Oscar nominee slips right into lighter fare, too. She was Michael Scott's endearingly dorky object of affection over a good stretch of "The Office," and the same week that her Steven Spielberg drama "Bridge of Spies" comes out she pops up in "Goosebumps." In "Bridge of Spies," though, she's straight-faced, playing Mary, the wife of Tom Hanks' Cold War-era lawyer defending a Soviet spy (Mark Rylance).

This is not your first Spielberg. You were in "War of the Worlds" as "Neighbor with Toddler."

[Laughs] "Yeah, Steven, why didn't you name me?" "You're going to die before the credits start." [On "Bridge of Spies"], it was nice to sit with him in an intimate family setting, talking about human behavior and try to create an active, living household with 12 things going on at once.

Your role in "Bridge of Spies" is also not huge.

They said, "This is not a very big part, but it's an important part." "Yes, of course I want to make a movie with you. Why would I say no?" [Laughs]

You could have bragging rights as the one who turned down Spielberg.

Maybe someone else did that before they called me. [Laughs] Maybe they're cool. I don't need to be cool.

What was he like, now that you really got a chance to work with him?

Even though I did have a small part in "War of the Worlds," Steven really did direct me. He takes time with the details, whether it's a small part or the lead character. It's not like some second A.D. coming over there and saying, "You have to stand to the left." He's all about creating human behavior and overlapping dialogue. The scenes aren't just about coverage. They're about a character's point of view. The scene where we exit the courthouse, even though I had no lines he says, "It's about Mary. This is the first time she's out in the public eye. The public is encroaching on her life. She's terrified." He has the flashes going off in my face and the crowd is coming in, and this ups Mary's protest, that she thinks he shouldn't take the case. Her family is in danger. But she knew there was a greater good. She was just fiercely protective of their family, like any good, sane mother would be.

For the kids

I did want to ask, lastly, about the two children's films you have on the docket. You're in "Goosebumps" and "Monster Trucks." Was that just a coincidence or were you actively looking for stuff that was for a younger audience?

I have a kid. My kid can't see either of these films because she's too young. But it's nice that my nieces can finally see something that I've done. [Laughs]

They're usually just watching "Gone Baby Gone."

Yeah, they have that on a loop in the house.

Danny Boyle: Steve Jobs wouldn't have wanted to be shown as nice

The director of the new biopic talks how to film "Sorkinese."

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Danny Boyle, right, directs Michael Fassbender on the set of "Steve Jobs." FRANCOIS DUHAMEL

Danny Boyle had quite the challenge with his latest film, "Steve Jobs." Not only was he making a biopic about one of the major tech gods, and not only was it structured in only three, very long, very chatty scenes — it was also written by Aaron Sorkin. A heavily visual director, the man behind "Trainspotting" and "Slumdog Millionaire" had to make language primary. That's a little easier when you have people like Michael Fassbender (as Jobs) and Kate Winslet doing the talking.

Your early films, like "Trainspotting" and "Shallow Grave," are very strong on language too.

The guy who wrote those, John Hodge, he writes like Aaron, except very sparsely. But he writes like [Sorkin]. He just writes dialogue; he doesn't give you any indication of how to do it. He gives you as few clues as possible, which is both intimidating and liberating. Because you realize [the dialogue is] inviting you, either by design or instinct — just inviting you to make a film of it. And that was what this was like. I'd never read anything like it: 185 pages of dialogue between six characters in three places. And that was it.

Biopics often have to fudge some facts for dramatic purposes.

I think [this film] has a case — which is disputable — for being just as accurate an analysis of him as a documentary would be. You speak to documentary filmmakers and the facts are very difficult to establish, because there are always contrary ones, and always people with opinions. The instincts of a writer like Aaron I trust, sometimes, more than facts. Kubrick said the truth is often not in the facts; it's in the feel of the storytelling. I believe that. You arrive at what you hope is a truthful portrait of him that audiences will believe. The actual facts of it all weren't necessarily true. But the feel of the film is truthful.

GETTY IMAGES

Be real

"Steve Jobs" is also not a hit piece, though Jobs isn't always likable. Not that likability is necessarily a good thing.

We're not chasing likability, because it would have been foolish to do that. The studios understandably still try to do that. They ask, "Can you make him a bit more likable in this scene?" and stuff like that. If [the real Jobs] heard you use the word "likability" he would have eviscerated you. Because he was about passion. We wanted the film to feel like that as well.

P.J. O'Rourke takes on Trump, Hillary and Sanders

The political commentator looks back on his National Lampoon days — and the current presidential race.

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge

P.J. O'Rourke is often described as the token conservative at National Lampoon, the seminal joke magazine that played like an R-rated version of Mad Magazine. He served as managing editor starting in 1973; today he files mostly at The Daily Beast. He's also one of the talking heads in "Drunk Stoned Brilliant Dead: The Story of the National Lampoon," a rollicking doc that looks at the legendary magazine's influence and many brilliant pieces.

You've worked for lots of nonconservative publications. I think both sides can agree on a lot of things being funny.
Oh, I guess. If someone's acting like a jerk. I don't think anyone has to make a distinction about their political beliefs to land on Donald Trump with both feet.

Today we're led to believe we always have to be in constant fisticuffs.
Yeah, what's that about? Especially when you have people like Hillary and Trump running. You're gonna fly this flag? [Laughs]

It looks like it will be a grim election. But it will be funny!
What's bad for the nation is good for me!

P.J. O'Rourke GETTY IMAGES

On Bernie Sanders

He seems like he could stir people like Obama did, but that seems unlikely.
Oh, no, impossible. Impossible. I was talking to someone who knew him pretty well. He used to live in Vermont. He'd been a Bernie supporter. He said, "Personally, the guy is just an a—hole. I contributed to his campaign, I supported him. But I tell, you, he's an a—hole. And the minute he starts getting enough public attention for that to be clear to the public, it will be all over."

Daisy Ridley plays Rey, one of the main characters in the forthcoming "Star Wars: The Force Awakens." LUCASFILM

Gender equality in 'Star Wars'

Remember back during Star Wars Celebration when the new film's first teaser was released? When Kathleen Kennedy talked about how important it was to her that there were more women in the "Star Wars" universe? That moment had me standing and applauding along with thousands of other women in the audience and around the world. Princess Leia was a groundbreaking character, but she was largely alone in terms of her sex. The prequels didn't really do much better, with a single lead female, a few handmaidens and a female on the Jedi council who didn't really speak. The prospect of my beloved franchise with more women sounded amazing.

When the original casting announcement came out for "The Force Awakens," the single female actor caused a backlash, but since then we've seen announcements for quite a number of female cast members, including Captain Phasma (Gwendoline Christie), a military leader. We know that "Star Wars Anthology: Rogue One" has a number of female characters, including the lead. It looks like the promise is being kept.

What actually makes me more excited is that this promise is part of the new canon's extended universe as well. In "Star Wars Rebels," which is canon, we not only got the return of "The Clone Wars" star Ahsoka Tano, but we have Hera and Sabine, the pilot and the warrior whose origins will be revealed in depth in Season 2.

Where I've seen it done best is in the books, "Moving Target," "Lost Stars" and "Aftermath." These books finally — finally — give us the 50/50 split between male and female characters that not even our modern day TV shows and films can manage. It's like there is an even gender split in real life or something! Imagine that!

Even better? In those books, women are equally represented as people in power, rogues, characters both strong and weak, bounty hunters, government officials, military commanders. There is even a mention of gender reassignment. No one seems to have any issue with women in power. The issues people have are with each person as an individual. It's almost jarring in its unfamiliarity.

It's been said many times that it's always easiest to tackle issues in the world through science fiction before it is in reality. Thank you, "Star Wars," for taking this on.

Aries Fun and entertainment will highlight your day. A close friend or relative will entice you to try something adventurous.

Taurus You must be clear about how much you are willing to do. Embarrassment could result if those around you expect more than you can give.

Gemini Holding a grudge is pointless and stressful. You will cause more harm internally if you harbor ill will toward others.

Cancer Timely information will accompany a chance for a new beginning. Hesitation will lead to a missed opportunity.

Leo Your competitive spirit will give you an advantage over your rivals. Others will be impressed by your skills, enabling you to gain support.

Virgo You may feel generous, but overindulgence will cause serious problems when your bills arrive. Offer your time or suggestions, not money.

Libra Love is on the rise. Participation in a philanthropic or charitable event will bring you recognition and respect from an influential individual.

Scorpio Unanticipated alterations to your home or property will be beneficial in the long run. A former friend will want to reconnect.

Sagittarius Travel and communication delays can be expected. Resist the urge to make hasty decisions or unreasonable promises.

Capricorn Finish projects, conclude contracts or finalize deals. Completing your current plans will show everyone that you mean business.

Aquarius Preparation will prevent you from being overwhelmed by your responsibilities. Helping others will introduce you to a diverse group.

Is your Facebook feed full of beaming people in light fall jackets hoisting bushels of apples? Is Instagram a series of pies cooling on stovetops? Don't be left out. Grab your selfie stick and head out of the city to one of these photo-worthy pick-your-own spots. Bonus: The selection of pumpkins and gourds you have in mind for your Halloween tablescape will be much bigger at one of these places than at Whole Foods.

RACHEL VIGODA

Linvilla Orchards

137 W. Knowlton Road in Media
Pumpkins get top billing at this 300-acre family-run farm enticing visitors with everything from hot apple cider and fresh-made pies, to pony rides, to moonlit hayrides. This month, the big attraction is Pumpkinland: piles of pumpkins as far as the eye can see, plus an impressive display of hand-carved jack-o'-lanterns and fall-tastic scarecrows. After you select the perfect pumpkin to cart home, it's time for apple picking.

Shady Brook Farm

931 Stony Hill Road in Yardley
Hop on a wagon to hitch a ride to the pumpkin patch, where you can pose like a celeb, plaid button-down optional, or spend a morning wandering through the corn maze and gathering apples from the orchard. When night falls, you have two choices: Keep up the wholesome fun in the moonlight, or opt for Horrorfest, which includes a walkthrough (or, run-through-screaming) Barn of Horror, and a maze dubbed scary enough to be for visitors 10 and up only.

Cherry Hill Orchards

400 Long Lane in Lancaster
Trek a little farther, out to Lancaster, where you can pick your own fruits and veggies in the fields or just head straight for the rows of fresh fruit, jams, baked goods and flowers in the picturesque country store. Bright orange pumpkins and more than 40 varieties of apples are available for picking. Keep this one in mind for a summer excursions too, when the orchards overflow with sweet cherries.

Leon Bridges goes all in

The much-talked-about newcomer brings '60s soul back with "Coming Home."

A couple years ago, soul singer Leon Bridges was working as a dishwasher in Texas. Now, he's selling out concerts across the U.S., and his first album, "Coming Home" debuted at No. 1 on Billboard's R&B/Hip-Hop Album charts this past summer. Comparisons to Otis Redding and Sam Cooke are inevitable with Bridge's throwback '60s musical style, but he brings his own hip-hop flair to the table, making his music stand out.

Going all in

Bridges' father introduced him to musicians like the ones he's so often compared to today. "My dad was always keeping up with black history," Bridges says. But he adds that it wasn't until he was older and getting into soul music that he really started giving them a close listen.

Bridges tells us he was "definitely nervous" to go full-on retro on his album. "I didn't know if I could do it because I came from a hip-hop and modern R&B background," he says. "I could have gone the way of using just bits and pieces, but I really wanted to go all the way in. I was so in love with the music, but of course it's going to come out my own way."

Community college and coffeehouses

It wasn't too long ago that Bridges played his first show at his community college in Texas. "One of my friends played the piano and we sang some cover songs," he says. "I was nervous but also so excited because it was my first time playing in front of people."

The 26-year-old taught himself guitar, first by watching YouTube videos and then asking some of his friends, who already knew how to play. "There was an open mic at this coffee shop I went to and I had a lot of friends who were guitar players there," he says. "They showed me a lot of things. … But over the years, I developed this certain style, and it's very sloppy, but it's a great tool to write songs."

Keeping it loose

Part of what gives "Coming Home" its raw, authentic sound is the way it was recorded. "We recorded it in this building that was basically a lot of different businesses and lofts, and it had a bar," Bridges describes. "So when people walked in, they would hear us recording."

He says some of what's on the album wasn't rehearsed at all, it just came to him on the fly. "Basically what you hear on 'Coming Home' is when I was playing acoustic guitar around town. There were certain things that came out of nowhere."

Mayday Parade: Emo forever

Mayday Parade's new album, "Black Lines," came out last week. PROVIDED

Ten years later, Mayday Parade is still serving up fresh emo-pop with their new album, "Black Lines."

EMILY LAURENCE
emily.laurence@metro.us

It's a feat for any band to stay together for a decade, and Mayday Parade has made it, with almost all its original members (Jason Lancaster left early on). We caught up with guitarist Alex Garcia to find out the secret of their longevity, talk about their new album "Black Lines" and why it's cool to be emo.

Changing things up

Mayday Parade has kept a consistent level of success with their emo-pop rock songs, but Garcia says "Black Lines" is a departure from their last four, though not a "transitional album," as it is sometimes being called in the press.

"There are still a lot of old Mayday Parade elements in there, but we used a lot more guitar effects than on the previous albums and experimented with different noises and song structures too," he tells us.

For the band, it was a welcome step outside their comfort zone, and one they think fans will appreciate. Derek Sanders' voice is pushed to the limit, covering a bigger range than in the past.

"Our single 'Keep in Mind, Transmogrification Is a New Technology' exemplifies that," Garcia says. "It starts off kind of quiet and eventually builds into a huge outro where he's at the top of his dynamic range and really pushing his voice to give it all that emotion."

More breakup songs

Emotion is something Mayday Parade has used from the start, particularly with their lyrics. Though the music may evolve, Garcia says their heartfelt lyrics are something they will never change.

"If we had lyrics that were very sterilized or silly and not coming from the heart, our fans wouldn't be as connected to the music," he says.

"For this genre more than some other genres, having lyrics people can relate to is important."

Not stopping anytime soon

Since the band lives spread out across the U.S., getting together to record and tour is a reunion they all look forward to.

"No one actually thought at the time that we would get this far when we started the band," Garcia says.

"The band is a total democracy, where everyone's opinion matters. There isn't one person trying to be more important than the others, which could cause resentment. … We're all in it for the long haul."

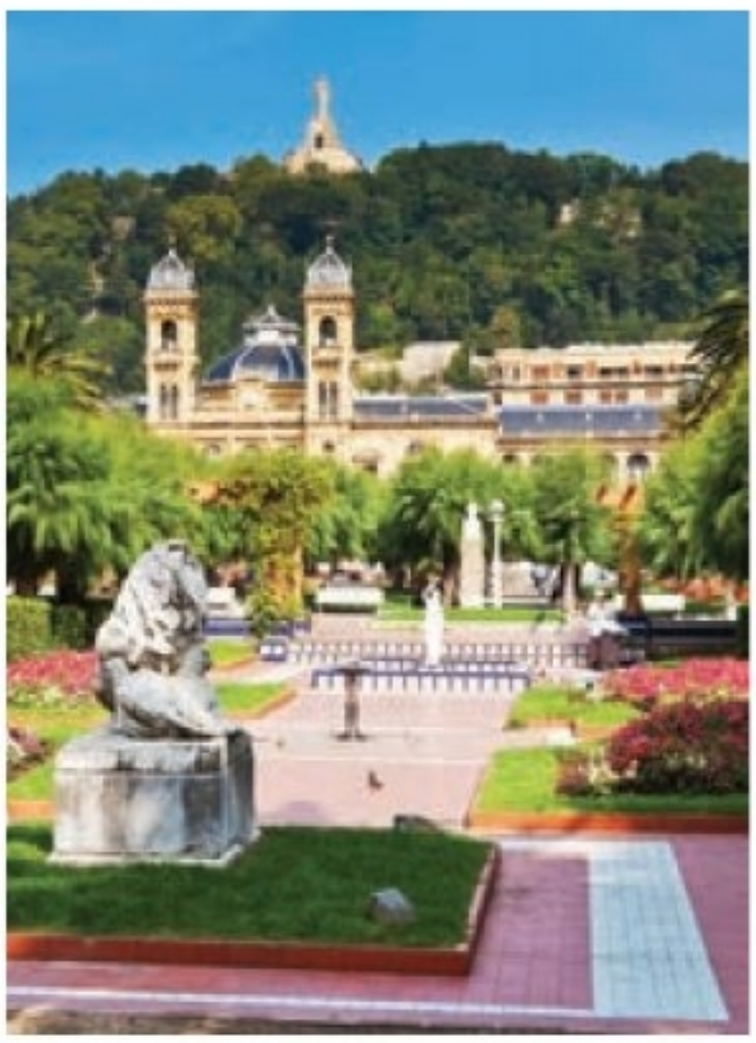
INSIGHT GUIDES

TRAVEL WEEKLY

INSIGHTGUIDES.COM TRAVEL WEEKLY, PHILADELPHIA, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 15, 2015

Basque in glory in northern Spain

ALL PHOTOS SHUTTERSTOCK



The cities of northern Spain have much to offer tourists in terms of art, culture, history and, of course, traditional Basque cuisine.

You'd be forgiven for thinking that the only thing that ever happens in Pamplona is the running of the bulls through the streets during the weeklong Festival of San Fermin each July. But Pamplona is one of several exciting cities in the northeast corner of Spain that have just as much to offer as the better known southern cities.

San Sebastian, an easy hour's drive north of Pamplona, is one of the most popular holiday resorts for Spaniards but is less known to overseas travelers. In 2016, that will change when San Sebastian becomes a European Capital of Culture, alerting the outside world to its many attractions. Beyond its wonderful beach curving around the Bahia de La Concha is the historic Old Town with ancient churches and the Museo San Telmo (Santelmomuseoa.com). If you want to find out about the Basque culture of this part of Spain, this museum, set in an old monastery, is an absorbing delight.

An hour west along the coast is Bilbao, the largest Basque city, with its wealth of museums. The most notable is the Guggenheim Museum Bilbao (Guggenheim-bilbao.es/en), looking just as futuristic and striking now as it did when it opened in 1997. It concentrates on modern art with work by artists including Willem de Kooning, Mark Rothko and Jeff Koons, but it also displays the work of Basque artists. Notable too is the Bilbao Fine Arts Museum, dating from 1908, with works from Goya, El Greco, Gauguin, Cezanne, Francis Bacon and more.

A two-hour drive through the dramatic, mountainous Parque Natural Aizkorri-Aratz takes you back to Pamplona, capital of the Navarre region. Founded in Roman times, it is as bustling and buzzing as any modern Spanish city, with cafes and tapas bars serving Basque food. It has medieval walls, a vast main plaza, an impressive Gothic cathedral, a fascinating old town, churches and museums, including the must-see Museo de Navarra. Avoid the bulls, and feast instead on the culture.

European Capitals of Culture

In 1983, Melina Mercouri, a Greek minister of culture and former actress, came up with the idea of designating one European city to be the City of Culture each year. Now they're called Capitals of Culture, and two cities share the honor. Start planning your travels, as the cities put on their best face with new museums, special exhibitions and one-off events.

2015 It's not too late to visit Mons in Belgium or Pilsen in the Czech Republic (known for the beer Pilsner Urquell).

2016 Sharing duties with San Sebastian will be Wroclaw in Poland, recently voted one of the world's best cities to live in.

2017 The Cultural Capitals will be Denmark's second city, Aarhus, and Paphos on the Mediterranean island of Cyprus.

Fall food fests in the Finger Lakes

Combine autumn leaf-peeping with tastes of the region's farm-to-table restaurants, wineries and brews, with a Punkin' Chunkin' and harvest festival to round it off.

The Finger Lakes fall culinary weekend is Oct. 24–25. It's a full menu of tastings, noshing, sipping, touring and dining, interspersed with concerts and seasonal events.

Oct. 23–24
Finger Lakes Beer Festival
Theglen.com
This festival is a beer lover's dream, with over 35 New York State breweries, cideries and distilleries gathered at Watkins Glen International Raceway, plus regional cuisine and a 32-team corn hole tournament. There's bonfire inside Turn 1 on Saturday night and live music by Iron Horse Bluegrass.

Oct. 24
Farm-to-Table Cooking Adventure
This all-day tour starts with a farm visit to harvest ingredients for the lunchtime cooking/demo class. A vineyard tour and wine tasting and pairing with regional cheese and fruit follows. It's $145 per person, reservations required.

Taste of the Finger Lakes
Bvtnaples.org
Chefs from area restaurants present samples of their specialties, paired with local wines. This is a good way to find restaurants to enjoy a full meal later in the weekend. Attendees must be 21.

Harvest Festival at Buttonwood Grove
Buttonwoodgrove.com.
Come here for more noshes and wine, by the glass or in slushies. The music is from local favorite Phil Dumond, who's opened for the likes of Willie Nelson and Buffalo Springfield. If you overimbibe, no problem: Buttonwood Grove has onsite accommodations.

Oct. 24–25
Punkin' Chunkin' at Varick Winery and Vineyard
Varickwinery.com
With a view of Cayuga Lake, it's easy to linger here, either at the tasting room, the country store (selling Varick's sauces, fruit butters, mustards "with an attitude" and local honey) or the comfortable, cozy inn. The Punkin' Chunkin' invites contestants to try to hit targets — no statistics on whether aim gets better or worse after the wine tastings.

Oct. 25 (and Nov. 1)
Through the Tasting Glass: The Wondrous Wines of Keuka Lake
Groups of five to 13 can tour the Keuka Lake wine region for private visits to some less-accessible wineries. The trip includes one of the few wineries that can call its wine "champagne." A wine-paring lunch is included.

Oct. 31
The Best of Seneca West Wine Tour
This one is for dedicated wine and beer connoisseurs. It starts with a visit to the boutique Kemmeter Winery, followed by lunch is at FLX Winery with sausages, burgers and homemade sides paired with an international selection of craft beers. Next up is a tour of Wiemer Vineyards, one of the Top 100 American wineries in 2014. The last stop is Red Tail Ridge Winery, which is producing varietals not found elsewhere in the Finger Lakes Region. It's $145 per person.

If you prefer independent touring, download three self-guided trail maps to Finger Lakes Wineries at Fingerlakewinecoutry.com. And for more information on the Finger Lakes, visit Visitfingerlakes.com.

Is Brown in long-term plans?

The Sixers have a good coach in Brett Brown, but he has just one year left on his contract after 2015-16.

ANDY JASNER
@AndyJasner
sports@metro.us

Brett Brown signed a four-year contract to coach the 76ers. This is already the third year.

The first two seasons have produced a combined 37 victories. And the 2015-16 version of the Sixers is likely to wind up in the lottery once again.

Joel Embiid is out for a second straight season. The Sixers are lacking a quality starting point guard. The bench is toothpick thin.

Promising first-round pick Jahlil Okafor will team with Nerlens Noel in the frontcourt to provide a glimpse of the future. But this tandem is still so young.

Brett Brown has gotten a lot out of his stock of extremely inexperienced players through two seasons with the Sixers. GETTY IMAGES

There are so many questions surrounding the Sixers.

One of the biggest ones is this: Will Brown stay for the long-term? It's a legitimate concern.

"That I just don't want to talk about it. I really don't," Brown told a group of media members at a preseason gathering. "I enjoy talking to everybody here. … I've said what I've had to say and I'm just really excited to coach the group and I'd be disappointed in myself if I commented many sentences beyond what I've just done as it relates to my contract. And that's alright. I'll try not to be rude and look at everybody, but when I say I don't have anything to say … you'll have heard it here first."

Brown is one of the most positive, upbeat coaches in the entire league. Losing has to take its toll. How can it not?

For now, Brown is happy coaching this extremely young group. How many losses will Brown be able to stomach? He chooses to take a different view.

"If you saw players that were just wallowing around and not improving, then I would worry," Brown said. "If you walked into a gym and you saw a lazy Philadelphia 76ers team that other coaches and other players didn't respect — they knew that they were going to leave with a lost tooth or a black eye when they play us, I would feel like I'm not doing my job. I left Chicago [recently], the NBA Coaches Convention, and I walk out proud. When you go up, and I know every one of the coaches quite well in the room, this is my 15th year in the NBA and you hear about how they're kind of blown away that with the losses that we have had and some of the streaks we've had to survive — that the group plays hard.

"I love coaching those guys. They play hard. Anybody here at the table could come in and say that group is amazing how they've stayed together and how hard they play. I respect my players. I'm proud of my players and I'm with my players. Those are the things that matter to me. Those are the ways that I candidly coach myself."

It would unrealistic to think the Sixers will make the playoffs this season. Even 30 wins would seem highly surprising.

When this season ends, Brown will have one year left on his contract. It's a fluid situation worth watching.

Willie Snead caught six balls for 141 yards against the Eagles in Week 5. GETTY IMAGES Talent is our top priority when drafting our season-long teams. If we just chase opportunity, we end with #regrets like Davante Adams and C.J. Anderson.

But now that we're six weeks into the season, we can start looking more at opportunity when prioritizing transactions. The talented guys aren't available, and big volume with mediocre talent can work well. We also now know which teams are going to be playing from behind a majority of the time, which often bodes well for certain kinds of players. So ignore the undrafted stigma and hop on board with these relative unknowns:

The need for Snead

Willie Snead wasn't even supposed to make the Saints' final roster coming out of camp. Now he's their No. 1 receiver. It's not because of injury, it's because he's earned it with reliably excellent play for four straight months. With Brandin Cooks getting exposed as a complementary player, Marques Colston toast/hurt and Brandon Coleman disappointing, Snead is Drew Brees' go-to guy. Although this pass game isn't what it once was, that's still a big role. Willie should be penned into lineups going forward.

Go west young man

Charcandrick West outsnapped Knile Davis 18-4 following Jamaal Charles' knee injury in Week 5. West also ran circles around Davis in the preseason, winning the backup job and holding it through the first month of the season. The Chiefs worked out free agents Ben Tate, Pierre Thomas and Bryce Brown this week, but didn't sign any of them. It's another vote of confidence in West, who plays well in the pass game — a crucial tool for Andy Reid as evidenced by the likes of Charles and Brian Westbrook.

Mr. Wilson's neighborhood

Marquess Wilson is the real deal. Finally adding bulk to his 6-foot-4 frame, he's recorded a 12-165-1 line over the last two weeks while Alshon Jeffery (calf) has sat out. Even once Jeffery returns, Wilson has significant appeal in this mess of a Bears season. Expect plenty of three-wide sets, with Wilson as the downfield target and Eddie Royal underneath. The Bears must develop their young talent like Wilson.

As of this week, the Eagles are projected to win nine games and have a 3 percent chance of winning the Super Bowl. GETTY IMAGES

Eagles-Giants game is a true make or break for both teams

The Eagles and Giants face, more or less, a must-win Monday night for playoff positioning.

EVAN MACY
@evan_macy
evan.macy@metro.us

Can a game in mid-October really have make-or-break playoff implications?

According to several football analytic sites, including ESPN's Pro Football Index, Monday Night's game between the 2-3 Eagles and the 3-2 Giants is as big as they come.

With the Cowboys and Redskins also at 2-3, the winner of Monday's game will lead the NFC East.

For New York, according to the Index, wins against Philadelphia and Dallas in their next two games would increase the Giants' playoff odds from 38 percent to 71 percent, nearly double.

For the Eagles, a win means they would have a 68 percent chance of making the playoffs with just a 38 percent chance if they lose. An Eagles victory would cut Big Blue's odds down to 29 percent.

With the Eagles set to host Monday's potential slugfest, Philly is currently a 4.5 point favorite and 71 percent favorite to win the game.

"We need to come out and have a great week of preparation for the Giants on Monday night," Connor Barwin said after last week's much-needed 39-17 win over the Saints. "If you go rest on this game and then go lay another egg next week, then this week's win was meaningless."

The Eagles weak remaining schedule could be one reason why the computer is so optimistic. After two difficult matchups against the Giants and the Panthers in Week 7, Philly has the luxury of facing the Cowboys for the second time in Week 9, fresh off a bye week.

They'll then play three favorable matchups against the Dolphins, Buccaneers and Lions (with two of these at home).

A lot can happen between now and then, but if the Eagles can handle the next five games on their schedule they can put themselves in a position to hold their own fate after Thanksgiving (when they head to Foxborough to face the defending champs Patriots).
